But in the spring ... some of the men ... sailed away round the eastern shores of the land and Thorvald went up the country with all his companions. He then said: "Here it is beautiful, and here would I like to raise my dwelling." Then went they to the ship ... and saw upon the sands ... three skin boats (canoes), and three men under each ... caught them all, except one, who got away with his boat. They killed the other eight, and then went back to the cape, and looked round them, and saw some heights inside of the firth (mouth of a river), and supposed that these were dwellings Then rushed out from the interior of the firth (mouth of a river) an innumerable crowd of skin boats, and made towards them Skrælings shot at them for a time, but afterwards ran away, each as fast as he could.
