Document I

In 1770, America took three-fourths of all the manufactures of Manchester. In 1767, the exports to Jamaica were nearly as great as they had been to all the English plantations together in 1704. The shipping trade had doubled, and the ships themselves were larger. In 1732, ships 750 tons were considered remarkable; in 1770 there were many in Liverpool of 900 tons; but in this, as in other branches of business, progress was still slow, partial, local, thus presenting a striking contrast to the rapid and general advance of the next half-century.
